

No amount of locks can protect sensitive and critical information as well as you can...

The adversary is looking and listening.

Protect personally identifiable information from strangers.

Shred sensitive and critical information when no longer needed.

Secure critical information when it is unattended.

Limit details about personal life on social networking sites.

Remove your CAC from your PC when departing your workstation.

Ensure persons asking for information over the phone have a need-to-know.

Always challenge strangers wandering around your workplace.

Practice OPSEC.
